WITH HEAD AND HEART

The Academic Society of Cardiovascular Nursing is an association of advanced practice nurses. We are committed to providing the best possible care for people with cardiovascular and cerebrovascular diseases, and for their relatives.

Why is nursing science important?

Many people, from the newborn to the aged, are affected by cardiovascular or cerebrovascular diseases, sometimes even both. Nursing these often chronically ill people and caring for their relatives have become an increasing challenge.

In order to effectively develop nursing practice, it is essential to gain new knowledge. We therefore draw on patient experience, the expertise of our advanced practice nurses, and also current research.

It is the responsibility of Nursing Science to generate and share this knowledge.

What are our goals?

The Academic Society of Cardiovascular Nursing engages in the professionalisation of nursing by:

- fostering research in the field of cardiovascular nursing
- providing better access to research for advanced practice nurses
- engaging in discussions on cardiovascular and cerebrovascular topics
- networking at national and international level

Join us!

If you are interested in cardiovascular nursing and either plan to start or have completed academic training, we look forward to welcoming you in our society.
